Asian cities are shifting and turning their focus towards human scale developments and better quality public spaces.

“The City at Eye Level Asia” is a book that showcases a collection of inspiring case studies on good public spaces as the backbone of the sustainable city from across the region. A collection of 43 cases, equally spread in over 15 countries throughout Asia. From Singapore to Asahikawa, and Hanoi to Mumbai, municipal governments, urban planners, activists, architects, placemakers and real estate developers are pioneering to create human-scale streets and loveable places, using a more co-creative approach to urban development. With The City at Eye Level Asia we bring you key insights and lessons learned from Asia’s front-runners in creative and community-led placemaking, heritage revitalization and place-led development, that are inspiring more future-proof places for people.

“As part of a community of urban practitioners, we have long felt that Asian cities have much to contribute to the global urban narrative and so, here is a book that offers antidotes to 21st century

THE CITY AT EYE LEVEL ASIA
